Program Highlights:

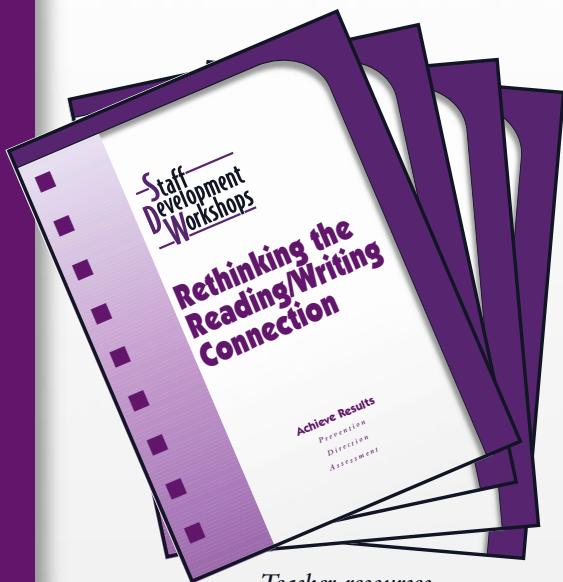

Help students see the connections between what they read and what they write

Find out how to select appropriate texts, talk wisely about them, and create classroom archives that enable students to keep on learning from them

Implement practical classroom techniques that enable students to make a wide variety of reading/writing connections

Discover ways to use literature to launch children's interest in learning, inspire them to lead wide-awake lives, and increase writing performance

Learn the essential requirements that need to be in place if schools are to succeed at raising committed readers and writers

Teacher resources will be on display.

Plus specific techniques for:

- illustrating elements of quality writing
- teaching a variety of crafting techniques
- using literature to support the writer's notebook
- creating classroom archives to document your teaching
- adding energy to the writing workshop
- building a strong classroom community
- helping students find their own topics for writing
- inspiring students to attempt new formats
- putting listening at the core of students writing processes
- showing students that language can be used in surprising ways
- demonstrating that everyday moments can be written about in fresh engaging ways
- using poetry throughout the school day
- encouraging detailed observations using precise language
- creating lifelong readers and writers

Use children's literature to lift the quality of student work in the writing workshop

Learn how students can make a wide variety of meaningful reading/writing connections

Special Benefits of Attending

- Learn about many available teacher resources and materials for students
- Meet continuing education requirements
- Opportunities for questions.... And answers

Achieve these results:

Provide Direction:

- Create a shelf of favorite literacy resources for teaching students about writing
- Create archives or mini-lesson scrapbooks to document your teaching
- Enable students to talk about good writing with confidence and competence
- Show students how to incorporate a wide range of elements from the books they are reading into their own writing
- Offer students more challenging structures for crafting personal narratives
- Demonstrate that books can be returned to again and again

About the presenter:

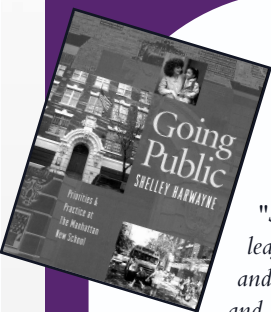

Shelley Harwayne has been affiliated with the New York City public schools for over thirty years as a teacher, staff developer, co-director of the Teachers College Writing Project, founding principal of the Manhattan New School, and currently as superintendent of Community School District # 2. She has worked as a consultant and keynote speaker throughout the United States and Canada, as well as in Ecuador, Mexico, Sweden, Norway, Australia, and in such diverse settings as Soweto, South Africa and Manila, the Philippines.

Shelley's publications include Lasting Impressions: Weaving Literature into the Writing Workshop, (Heinemann, 1992), Going Public: Priorities and Practice at the Manhattan New School, (Heinemann, August 1999), Lifetime Guarantees: Toward Ambitious Literacy Teaching, (Heinemann, March 2000), Writing Through Childhood: Rethinking Process and Product, (Heinemann, October 2001) and her most recent publication, Messages to Ground Zero: Children Respond to September 11, 2001, (Heinemann, August 2002).

She also collaborated on Living Between the Lines, (Heinemann 1990) and the production of a video and accompanying staff development guidebook called The Writing Workshop: A World of Difference, (Heinemann, 1987).

Shelley has also published two children's books, Jewels, a poetry anthology and a picture book, What's Cooking ?, (Mondo, 1996).

Here is what experts say about Shelley's book "Going Public"

"I've visited this unique school six times ... At last the book is here and is must reading for every administrator, teacher, parent, and all who care about public education."
Donald Graves,
Author of A Fresh Look At Writing

"Shelley is the most gifted educator I know... She and her colleagues transformed the institution of public school into a schoolhouse and created a culture of trust, respect, character, rigor, common vision, and love... As I read I took notes nonstop about things I want to do, try, and get tomorrow."

Nanci Atwell, Author of In The Middle

"Shelley celebrates the possibilities for living and loving life in a public school."

Regie Routman, Author of Conversations

"This is not a book about ideas alone, but about all the nitty-gritty details... It's irresistible... I just wish I had put all Shelley's ideas into practice yesterday. Thank you, thank you, Shelley."

Deborah Meier,
Author of The Power of Their Ideas
